

THE POLITICAL WORLD IN INDIANA

INDIANAPOLIS, August 10.—Probably the most striking contrast in state politics as the 1920 campaign opens is the condition of the organization of the Republican and Democratic parties.

At the Hotel Severin where the Republican headquarters are located there is every evidence of a trim, well arranged and perfectly thought out organization. The reverse is true at the Denison Hotel where the hand-full of leaders of the Democratic party are making frantic efforts to patch together the semblance of an organization.

Benjamin Bosse, mayor of Evansville, and Democratic state chairman, confessed at a meeting of his state committee here this week that it was impossible for him to induce Hoosier men and women to enter into a campaign in the interests of the party. This sad lack of co-operation on the part of the Democrats is causing Bosse and Thomas Taggart, the French Lick hotel, and candidate for United States Senator, many a sleepless night.

But it is not necessary to get admissions from the head of the party to see that organization work is not coming up to standard in the Democratic fold. Some time ago Mr. Bosse declared publicly that every conceivable sort of bureau would be established and manned. So far the state committee has been able to get together only a lame publicity bureau and has made a botch of its speakers' bureau in appointing John Holtzman of Indianapolis as its head because of Holtzman's reputation in certain Democratic circles.

The only other appointment of importance made by Bosse was that of Burt New. In fact, Mr. New is the secretary of the state committee, but so far he has not been honored with that title. Sam Trabue still holds the title of secretary and Bosse does not dare to unseat him officially or to give him his title to New.

Next week Fred Robinson will assume active control of the Republican speakers' bureau. Mr. Robinson was one of the state managers for Warren T. McCray, nominee for Governor, in the primary race. Within a few days Vernon Van Fleet of South Bend will assume his duties with the Republican state committee, and will be in charge of organizing Republican clubs throughout the state.
